Anti-epileptics were found in the drinking water of Southern California ; a sex hormone was found in San Francisco's water ; three medications and an antibiotic were found in the water supply of Tuscon, Arizona ; and a mood stabilizer was found in the water of New Jersey. And that's just to name a few. An exhaustive five-month investigation by Associated Press has found the drinking water in at least twenty-four major American cities across the country contains trace amounts of a wide array of pharmaceuticals. We speak with Associated Press national writer, Jeff Donn.
